

SENATOR THE HON MATHIAS CORMANN
Minister for Finance
Leader of the Government in the Senate

Dear Senator

RE: Treasury Laws Amendment (Enterprise Tax Plan No.2) Bill 2017

As previously discussed, in coming weeks, the Senate will be discussing the Government's proposal to make Australia's business tax rate more competitive.

I am writing to explain why we believe this is very important not just for our companies but, most importantly, for everyday Australians. More internationally competitive tax rates are necessary if we want to create more secure, well paying jobs and a better standard of living across all parts of our Australian community.

Approximately nine out of ten working Australians are employed by a private sector business. The ability of our businesses to compete and grow in an increasingly tough international environment will determine whether more jobs are created in the future and to what extent wages are able to grow. It is very clear our major competitors are moving quickly to support their businesses. This poses a real and immediate challenge to businesses in Australia and, if left unaddressed, exposes us to the real threat of constraining investment, jobs growth and improved wages.

That is why our public policy settings must make it easier for our businesses to compete and invest, and it is why our Government is proposing, over time, to reduce the tax rate for all Australian businesses to 25 per cent.

The case for this change is based on three key propositions:

- First, in a fiercely competitive global economy, Australia's future economic prosperity is not guaranteed.

Business tax policy is a central part of ensuring our businesses remain globally competitive. At 30 per cent for all businesses with a turnover of more than $50 million a year, our business tax rate is now one of the highest in the world. Nearly all of the countries we directly compete with have substantially lower business tax rates.

The US has recently reduced its business tax rate to 21 per cent and the UK has already reduced their business tax rate to 19 per cent and is moving to 17 per cent by 2020. France is moving to reduce their business tax rate from 33 per cent to 25 per cent by 2022.

Reducing our business tax rate is even more important now than it was at the last election. Back then our business tax rate was still lower than in the US. If we don't act now, our business tax rate will remain 9 percentage points higher than the US.

We cannot expose our economy and Australian businesses to the drain on investment, growth and jobs that would follow from an increasingly globally uncompetitive business tax rate.

- Secondly, reducing business tax for all businesses is an important pro-growth reform for the Australian economy.

More than 4,500 Australian businesses have a turnover above $50 million a year, employing about 4 million people. Legislating the remaining 7 years of our enterprise tax plan now would give those businesses the certainty they need to make investment decisions for the future in the knowledge that they will be competitive in the years ahead.

This will ensure that business remains the engine of growth and the pacemaker of employment. As former Prime Minister Julia Gillard said in 2012, *"if you are against cutting company tax, you are against growth."*¹

For businesses with a turnover of up to $50 million a year, the Senate has already voted to reduce their business tax rate to 25 per cent by 2026-27. It would be economically damaging to effectively entrench a tax incentive for businesses to be smaller by limiting lower taxes to them rather than to encourage businesses to keep growing.

Bill Shorten as the Assistant Treasurer in the Gillard Government very eloquently and succinctly explained this public policy reality in a speech to ACOSS in Melbourne on 30 March 2011: *"Lowering the corporate rate for smaller businesses only (as the Greens propose) creates an artificial incentive for Australian businesses to downsize. In worse case scenarios some businesses might actually lay people off to get smaller - and the size based different tax treatment would create a glass ceiling on business workforce growth. Instead we want a level playing field regardless of the size of the company."*²

Peter Strong the CEO of the Council of Small Business of Australia made clear on behalf of small business about business tax cuts for all, including big business: *"If we don't do it then the tax cut for small business and medium business will eventually become meaningless because if big business isn't investing, if big business isn't building things and creating new opportunities, then that means small business as a group will find less opportunities for us, and as that comes along it will be less jobs and less prosperity for Australia."*³

- Thirdly and crucially, the prime beneficiaries of business tax reform will be wage-earners, shareholders (including self-funded retirees through their superannuation) and consumers.

This is confirmed by a range of highly regarded leading economists, including former Treasury Secretary Dr Ken Henry who made the point during the period of the previous Labor Government that *“if the company income tax were to be cut, the principal beneficiaries will be workers.”*⁴

On the other hand, the maintenance of a relatively high business tax rate compared to other countries we compete with imposes costs on Australian families. As the Commonwealth Treasury has pointed out, *“while company tax is paid by companies, the burden is passed on to shareholders, consumers and employees.”*⁵

The decision the Senate makes in coming weeks on this important piece of legislation will directly impact on Australia’s position in an increasingly competitive world.

We strongly believe that it is important to support this legislation now to ensure our business tax rates are competitive with other major economies so Australian businesses can have increased confidence to invest knowing there will be a competitive business tax rate in the future. To not pass this legislation now would pose an immediate threat to investment, jobs and future wages growth with a consequent real impact on the living standards of everyday Australians who would inevitably suffer as a result.

We are very genuine in our belief that passing this legislation is in our national interest.

You will no doubt continue to hear a great diversity of views over the coming weeks about the case in favour and against our proposal to secure more jobs and higher wages by giving businesses a more competitive tax rate. For your consideration I attach some information on some of the most common claims that have been made in the debate so far.

The simple reality is that the world is moving and we have an obligation to Australian workers and their families to ensure our companies are in the best position to compete at a time of significant change and increased competitive tension around the world. If we want Australian workers to have the best possible opportunity to get ahead we need to ensure that the businesses which employ them have the opportunity to be more successful and more profitable. There really is no other way.

Australia’s workers and their families deserve the best possible opportunity to get ahead. That is why I am seeking your support for this legislation.

I am available to discuss any questions or concerns you may have on this important reform of our business tax arrangements.

Kind regards

Mathias Cormann
Minister for Finance

ATTACHMENT AMyths and misleading claims in the business tax debate

Until recently, we had nearly four decades of bipartisan support for business tax reform. Regrettably, the Leader of the Opposition, Bill Shorten and his Shadow Treasurer, Chris Bowen have reversed their previous strong support for a more competitive company tax rate, ostensibly for political not policy reasons..

You will no doubt be hearing many claims from the Opposition and others regarding our proposed business tax reforms. I want to briefly counter six myths in particular that the Opposition and others are attempting to use to try and justify their position.

Myth 1: Australia cannot afford company tax reform.

That is plain wrong. Our business tax reform is fully costed and reflected in the Government's Budget forecasts and projections which show the Budget will return to surplus in 2020-21 and will remain in surplus over the medium term. The Budget is forecast to be in surplus by the time the company tax rate is reduced to 27.5 per cent for companies with a turnover below $250 million and is projected to have been in surplus for six years before the company tax rate eventually reduces to 25 per cent for all companies.

Moreover, it is not as if the Opposition is proposing to save the cost of the company tax cuts if they were not to proceed. They have already committed the entire fiscal cost of those company tax cuts and more to increases in expenditure. It is a matter of record that at the 2016 election they promised a worse Budget bottom line than the Coalition over the following seven years despite locking in the higher tax rate of 30 per cent for all businesses with a turnover above $2 million a year. As a matter of logic and simple arithmetic, the Opposition cannot simultaneously direct the tax cuts towards other priorities (on the spending side of the Budget) and argue that they are unaffordable.

Also, the fiscal cost of tax cuts cannot simply be substituted with increased expenditure without worsening the Budget bottom line. That is because our budget forecasts, which include the cost of the company tax cuts, are also based on a self-imposed assumption that we will not let tax revenue as a share of GDP exceed 23.9 per cent. In contrast, any decision to increase spending would directly deteriorate the Budget bottom line unless decisions were made at the same time to increase the overall tax burden in the economy well above the 23.9 per cent cap to pay for it. Increasing the tax burden on the economy in this way would have a negative effect on investment, growth, jobs and wages.

Importantly, this also means that beyond the business tax cuts, which have been reflected in the budget bottom line since the 2016-17 Budget, we have effectively already assumed future further tax cuts in our Budget projections. This means that legislating the remaining cut to company tax rates for businesses above $50 million will not prevent us from providing further tax cuts, for example to income tax, in the future. Further tax cuts, in addition to the business tax cuts, can be provided without compromising the Budget position or projected return to surplus. Indeed, as already flagged by the Prime Minister and the Treasurer, we are committed to putting together a comprehensive tax package, including personal income tax cuts, for the next Budget.

Myth 2: Company tax reform is just a handout to the ‘big end of town.’

That is also plainly wrong.

As former Treasury Secretary Ken Henry said, because high company tax rates reduce investment from overseas and lower the demand for Australian workers, *“in the long run, company tax affecting mobile capital is paid by labour - predominantly geographically immobile unskilled labour.”*¹

Recent research in the American Economic Review (the most respected economics journal in the world) examined company tax rates in Germany and found that “workers bear about one-half of the total [company] tax burden...low-skilled, young and female employees bear a larger share of the [company] tax burden”.²

Respected Canadian tax expert, Professor Jack Mintz has pointed out that “companies do not bear the taxes they pay, but people do”. Mintz adds that this means that *“lower company tax costs means higher compensation for workers and lower prices for consumer goods, both of which directly contribute to higher living standards. Tackling the tax cost to business will help increase the nation’s well-being in the long run.”*³

Moreover, according to Deloitte Access Economics analysis company tax collections will top $1.14 trillion over the period to 2026-27. In other words, the proposed company tax reform accounts for just 4.3 per cent of total company tax collections and less than 1 per cent of total revenue collections over the decade.⁴

A lower company tax rate will make it easier to attract foreign investment and raise firms’ ability to re-invest in the business, hire new workers and ultimately succeed. Successful and profitable Australian businesses will pay more tax, which will provide us with the capacity to sustainably fund the level of social, health and other public services we have come to expect and want to preserve for our children and grandchildren.

More business investment, such as upgrades to machinery and business expansions, will also make Australian business more successful and will ensure they are better able to compete and sell more Australian products and services around the world and ultimately provide higher investment returns for self-funded retirees and mum and dad investors.

Larger businesses also provide a critical role in supporting small and medium businesses, buying their products and services. The more successful and the more profitable those bigger businesses are the more products and services they will buy from smaller and medium business and the better for the 9 out of 10 working Australians working in a private sector business - big, small or medium sized.

Myth 3: Company tax cuts won’t increase investment, growth, employment or wages

This is also demonstrably wrong.

The IMF has recently lifted its global growth forecasts off the back of the US tax cuts. Billions of dollars in additional capital investment flowed into the US economy within weeks of their company tax cuts passing US Congress.

More than 350 US companies have given wages increases or bonuses to more than four million workers following the Trump Administration's tax cuts.

The Government's first tranche of tax cuts passed in early 2017 and last year the Australian economy added more than 400,000 net new jobs.

Wages growth has started to lift with the most recent national accounts figures showing wages growth of 1.2 per cent over the September quarter and 3.0 per cent through the year

Modelling released in 2016 by Treasury analysts shows that if we had a 25 per cent business tax rate today, full time workers on average weekly earnings would have an extra $750 in their pockets each and every year.⁵

Treasury modelling released in 2015 showed that every net dollar increase in company taxes reduces wages by $2.⁶

Highly respected economist Chris Murphy – who did the modelling work for the Henry Tax review under the previous Labor Government – quantified the substantial consumer benefits from a reduction in the corporate tax rate finding that for every $1 cost to the Budget, the company tax cut provides a gross benefit to consumers of $2.39.⁷

Until recently, the Opposition agreed that company tax cuts were desirable. Labor's 2010 Budget stated: *"Cutting the company tax rate will make Australia a more competitive destination for investment. Greater investment in capital will support higher productivity and real wage increases for Australian workers."*⁸

In 2011 Mr Shorten stated: *"Cutting the company income tax rate increases domestic productivity and domestic investment. More capital means higher productivity and economic growth and leads to more jobs and higher wages."*⁹

In 2015, when asked if he agreed with the statement that company tax falls hardest on workers, the Shadow Treasurer, Chris Bowen said "It is a statement of fact that I agree with".¹⁰

Myth 4: Under dividend imputation, business tax cuts will reduce returns for self-funded retirees.

Some have claimed that a lower company tax rate would leave some investors worse off by reducing franking credits under dividend imputation. This is incorrect. A lower company tax rate would be good for investors, including retirees, by boosting future dividends and the future value of their shares.

Recent research from the Reserve Bank of Australia shows that internal funding (that is, retained earnings) is the main source of new finance for Australian businesses.¹¹ Dividend imputation is not relevant when companies reinvest their profits back into the business and increase the value of firm. A lower company tax rate will encourage Australian businesses and companies to invest more, expand domestically rather than overseas and ultimately provide better returns to Australian investors.

As Self-Managed Super Fund Association chief executive, John Maroney accurately pointed out, *“a lower company tax rate would result in higher earnings which would then be distributed in higher dividends or used to increase the value of companies over time.”*¹²

In a similar vein, KPMG Tax Partner Grant Wardell-Johnson pointed out that a company tax cut *“will manifest in longer term capital gain for the domestic shareholders of Australian companies. There is going to be less tax paid, more cash in the company, more investment and then greater dividends in the future.”*¹³

Myth 5: Australian business does not pay its fair share of tax and doesn’t deserve tax relief.

This is also wrong. All Australian businesses are required to pay business tax on their profits, not their earnings.

The Commissioner of the Australian Tax Office, Chris Jordan has dismissed suggestions of widespread tax avoidance by businesses operating in Australia. He told the Senate Economics Legislation Committee that *“I have said many times that the majority of large corporates, especially Australian owned companies, pay the right amount of tax in Australia and are open and transparent in their dealings with us.”*¹⁴

Australia has one of the strongest corporate tax systems in the world. The Australian Taxation Office has recently noted they are better equipped than ever to work with Australian companies to ensure they pay the right amount of tax on their Australian profits, including through one-on-one intensive engagement with the largest Australian companies.

Company tax collections over the last decade have totalled $663 billion and company tax is expected to contribute almost 20 per cent of total Commonwealth taxation revenue in 2017-18. Australia also relies more on company tax collections than most other developed countries. The 2015 Tax Discussion Paper, Re-Think, noted that Australia’s corporate tax revenue was 5.2 per cent of GDP, while the OECD average was 2.9 per cent.¹⁵

Nearly two decades ago, Australia ranked in the top five countries on the World Economic Forum’s global competitiveness index. In the 2017-18 survey, Australia had slipped to 21st in these rankings, with tax rates ranked as the second most problematic factor in doing business in Australia (behind labour regulation).¹⁶

Most importantly, the Government’s tax plan is about setting the Australian economy up for the years and decades ahead – our plan is about future investment, future jobs, future wages, future growth, and the economic prosperity of our children and grandchildren. Even if a company has made tax losses in the past that does not mean it will ignore future tax rates (either in Australia or overseas) when making decisions about investment, jobs and wages.

Myth 6: With all the pre-tax deductions available to Australian business and not available overseas, our effective business tax rates are comparable

This is false. Data on effective average tax rates collected by the Oxford University Centre for Business Taxation between 2003 and 2017 – which takes into account depreciation rates and other international differences in tax bases - shows that Australia’s effective average corporate tax rate is now 27th highest out of 33 OECD economies. Relative to the G20, between 2003 and 2017 Australia slipped from 5th to 12th place. Importantly, the most recent update to the Oxford data (early 2017) was undertaken before the US repealed its corporate alternative minimum tax, cut its headline rate from 35 to 21 per cent and allowed full immediate expensing of short-lived capital investment for five years.

POLITICS BEFORE WORKERS' WELLBEING FOR SHORTEN

Labor leader has often stated the importance of competitive business taxes

MATHIAS CORMANN

Our economic mission is to secure more jobs and higher wages so families around Australia today and in the future have the best possible opportunity to get ahead. Jobs and higher wages don't grow on trees. They are created and paid for by successful, profitable businesses.

About nine out of 10 working Australians work for a private sector business. Their future job security, career prospects and wage increases depend on the future success and profitability of the businesses that employ them. That is why the Turnbull government is so focused on making sure our public policy settings help business be more successful — so they can hire more Australians and pay them better wages. That is also why we are so committed to press ahead with the next phase of our plan to reduce the tax rate for all businesses to 25 per cent.

Australia is an open trading economy competing with the rest of the world. The foundation for our more than 26 years of continued growth are the economic reforms of the Hawke, Keating and Howard governments, as well as the further reforms we have pursued in more recent years. All these reforms open our economy to the world while making sure we are and can remain genuinely globally competitive.

This has made us stronger and more resilient, lifted our living standards and improved our capacity to sustainably fund the level of social, health and other public services we have come to expect and want to preserve for our children and grandchildren.

Our ambitious free trade agenda, for example, is about helping businesses sell more Australian products and services around the world. In turn, those businesses can hire more Australians and pay better wages. It also helps ensure Australians can benefit from access to valued products and services from around the world at globally competitive prices. Opening up our economy to global competition, while it can be uncomfortable at times, has been a key driver of a substantial lift in our prosperity standards and opportunity for decades. Periods of lower global growth, as experienced in recent years, or periods of rapid innovation force us to adapt quickly to remain competitive. The alternative is to be left behind.

Being engaged in global competition also means our business tax policy settings need to remain under review. Our business tax rate used to be globally competitive. Not anymore. At 30 per cent, our business tax rate is now one of the highest in the world. Almost all of the countries with which we directly compete have substantially lower business tax rates. The US has locked in a rate of 21 per cent with an immediate and dramatic effect boosting investment, growth and wages in the US. Britain reduced its business tax rate to 19 per cent and is moving down to 17 per cent by 2020. Even France, under President Macron, is moving to reduce its business tax rate from 33 per cent to 25 per cent by 2022.

(Macron was the minister for the economy in the most recent socialist administration of France. He is hardly a right-wing "trickle-down-economics" ideologue.)

Reducing our business tax rate is even more important now than it was at the last election. Back then our business tax rate was still lower than the US. At the next election, if business tax cuts don't pass, it would be 9 per cent higher. If we don't reduce our business tax rate for all businesses, not just some, to 25 per cent, we will lose investment to other parts of the world. We will miss out on growth. Our businesses will be less successful, which means they will necessarily hire fewer Australians and pay them lower wages.

More successful businesses creating more jobs are what we want, because it also means stronger competition for Australian workers, forcing business to pay more to secure their services. Global growth is picking up, partly because of the Trump tax cuts legislated by the US congress. We need Australian business to be able to keep up with their competition around the world.

We already legislated tax cuts to 25 per cent for small and medium-sized businesses (with a turnover of up to $50 million). This implemented the first three years of our 10-year enterprise tax plan to June 30, 2019. We can't stop here. All our businesses need to be able to be competitive. Holding bigger businesses back is bad not just for their employees but also those working for smaller and medium-sized businesses selling their products and services to those businesses or their workers. It would also be economically damaging to effectively entrench a tax incentive for business to be smaller by limiting lower taxes to them rather than to encourage businesses to keep growing.

A total of 4500 Australian businesses have a turnover of more than $50m a year, employing about four million people. Legislating the remaining seven years of our enterprise tax plan would give those bigger businesses the certainty they need to make investment decisions for the future, in the knowledge that they will benefit from a lower business tax rate down the track.

Bill Shorten knows that a more competitive business tax rate for all businesses is important. He has made that argument many times before. He is not opposing business tax cuts because he believes they are bad policy; he is opposing them because of politics. He has made a cynical judgment that holding Australia back is in his own political interest. He would rather have fewer jobs and lower wages now to help him coast into office on what he hopes will be the wave of public discontent it would generate. It is a highly reckless, irresponsible and self-serving choice, which is yet another demonstration that he lacks the character and integrity to be prime minister of Australia.

The Turnbull government wants to deliver more jobs and higher wages. In opposing business tax cuts, Shorten is deliberately standing in the way.
